Featured Program
MayaWorks - Guatemala

MayaWorks empowers indigenous women artisans to end their cycle of poverty, achieve economic security, and create a brighter future for themselves and their families by providing international markets for their handcrafted products, access to microcredit loans and expanded educational opportunities.

Project - Maya Women’s Cross Generational Economic Development

Textiles are an integral part of Mayan culture and weaving is often passed down from mother to daughter. Dining for Women’s grant will help expand markets for traditional Guatemalan crafts, provide literacy and leadership training for the artisans and scholarships for their daughters.

DFW's grant of $50,000 will directly affect 125 women artisans, provide scholarships for 100 of their daughters and indirectly aid 500 others in their communities.

Sustained Program Funding
Prevention International: No Cervical Cancer (PINCC), India

When Dr. Kay Taylor volunteered on a 2003 medical mission to Honduras, she found three cases of invasive cervical cancer - as many as she had seen in 15 years' practice as an OB/GYN doctor at Kaiser. That was a catalyst. She established Prevention International: No Cervical Cancer (PINCC) in 2005 and took early retirement to begin fighting the scourge of cervical cancer among poor women living in under-resourced areas.

Cervical cancer is the number one cancer killer for women in the developing world. Caused by the sexually transmitted human papilloma virus (HPV), it takes 15-20 years to develop into an invasive cancer. Detected early as pre-cancerous cells or dysplasia, it can be easily treated. It is one of the few preventable cancers. Yet every year, nearly 300,000 women world-wide die of this disease.

In 2011, DFW provided $36,698 to support PINCC’s campaign on cervical cancer prevention in El Salvador. DFW also organized service trips to Nicaragua and El Salvador with PINCC in 2012.

With sustained funding of $45,000 over 3 years from Dining for Women, PINCC’s objective in India is to initiate and complete three programs in Bangalore (Karnataka Province), Siliguri (Darjeeling District, West Bengal) and Hyderabad (Andhra Pradesh Province). The total impact of the training program over three years is estimated to affect the lives of 12,000 Indian women. It is expected that 10-13 percent of women examined will be found to have pre-cancerous lesions and will be treated, thus saving about 1,500 women from developing cervical cancer.

(Grant requested: $15,000 in 2013; $15,000 will also be granted in 2014 and in 2015 based on fulfillment of progress reporting requirements.)

Next Month’s Featured Program (reminder, there is no Sustained Program in June/July/August)
In June we’ll feature Breaking Ground in Cameroon. Their Women's Entrepreneurial Program (WEP) provides instruction to women in farming techniques – helping them create a community organic garden, providing seeds for transplantation into family gardens and instruction on how to include these crops into their diets.

They also provide specific training in other vocational opportunities such as soap making, palm and coconut production and oil processing and pig farming, as well as offering microcredit to help launch new businesses. Women in these programs often become community leaders who oversee the agricultural projects and loan programs.
